

Situational Judgment Test – Service

What is it?

Excellence in customer service is critical to the success of service organizations and manufacturers of products that require reliable service. With the increasing number of businesses capable of providing quality products at a reasonable price, customer service has become the competitive difference. Given the importance of providing excellent customer service in the present and future marketplace, organizations need to employ individuals who possess a high degree of service skills and who apply those skills effectively.

PsyMetrics' SJT - Service consists of attitudinal, behavioral, and situational questions aimed at assessing the candidate's ability to problem solve and use appropriate judgment while performing in a service function. The test was developed to assist organizations in identifying those who have a strong service orientation, meaning individuals who possess and demonstrate those skills necessary for providing excellent service.
